The Beecher-Tilton Trial.

BROOKLYN, Jan. 29.—At the opening of the Court for the Tilton-Beecher trial to-day, Beecher and wife and Mrs. Tilton were absent. The Court was crowded as usual. Counsel and jury arrived promptly. Shearman busied himself preparing a reply to Tilton's counsel on application to allow the plaintiff to testify. Pryor resumed his argument shortly after the opening of the Court.

after the opening of the Court. He referred to the decision cited by the counsel for the defense, claiming that several of them had no basis in reason, common sense or justice, and should be ignored. He argued that the present case could not be governed by the rule that the husband or wife could not tes-tify against each other. As to the issue tify against each other. As to the issue bere, the witness was to testify as to the adultery of Henry Ward Beecher.

Speaking of the moral and ethical views of the case as presented by Evarts yesterday, Pryor said his learned adver-sary's argument was irrelevant. Pryor spoke over an hour, when Beech followed him.

Mr. Beach paid an eloquent tribute to Evarts' speech, but said he had entirely misrepresented the issue. "He (Evarts) has given your honor an illustration of a happy home invaded by the rude hand of the law; let me give your honor an illustration."

tion."

He then vividly described the home of the plaintiff, his trail confiding wite and her fail. His description and delivery were remarkably elegant, while his diction was pure and his voice melodeous. He held the audience spell-bound. Tilton was much affected.

He leaned upon his hand and tears started to his eyes several times. Stopping from the varied tone of oratory affecting the conjugal relations of the plaintiff and wife, Mr. Beach touched on the legal points of the case, and cited numerous authorities from the decisions in the New York cases to support his argument.

Beach had not concluded at the recess.
